The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) formerly known as food stamps, is the most effective anti-hunger program in the nation, providing low-wage working families, seniors, and individuals with money to buy food. The Department of Human Services (DHS) administers the program and each Tennessee county DHS office oversees the application for individuals in their county.

SNAP pulls families out of poverty, especially children, leading to better health, nutrition and education outcomes.

Families need support right now. The pandemic has caused higher rates of poverty and food insecurity. Many families who have not participated in the nutrition safety net programs may now be eligible, but don't know how to apply. This provides an opportunity to share information with families who are new to SNAP.

Why is SNAP Outreach in Schools important?

- Reduces the number of school meal applications to process and verify by directly certifying children to the National School Lunch Program (NSLP).
- Improves a school's ability to adopt the Community Eligibility Provision (CEP) and provide free school meals to all students.
- Increases federal reimbursement revenue and enables schools to meet area eligibility thresholds for participation in programs like summer and afterschool meals.
- Participating in SNAP may qualify students for the P-EBT program.
Who is eligible for SNAP?

SNAP eligibility is based on a household’s income and resources. A household’s gross income must be less than 130% of the Federal Poverty Level (FPL) and their net income (after deducting living expenses, etc.) must be under 100% of the FPL. Most households cannot have more than $2,250 in resources to be eligible.

In comparison, families with students eligible for reduced lunch through the NSLP must have an income between 130-180% of the FPL and students eligible for free lunch must have a household income of less than 130% of the FPL. Students who participate in the NSLP, especially those who receive free lunch, may be eligible for SNAP.

Partners Beyond Schools

Partners beyond school can share information and connect families with SNAP and other food resources. Champions for schools can share information, host events, or connect families to the nutrition safety net programs.

Existing opportunities for outreach

The most successful outreach will use existing modes of communication. For example, SNAP outreach and resource distribution can be done through the following:

- School/Community Fairs
- Back to School Events and Send-home Packets
- Parent-teacher Conferences
- Free/reduced Lunch Application Packets

How does SNAP outreach work in schools?

SNAP outreach in schools is a collective effort between school administrators, teachers, partner organizations, and even student/parent groups. School counselors or representatives from organizations like Community in Schools can play an important role in coordinating outreach and sharing information resources. Your district’s school board can help to reach more families who need support. School can raise awareness and reduce stigma among families with school-aged children who may be eligible for SNAP.

Dear Parent,

Covid-19 continues to impact Tennessee families. You may be eligible for SNAP (also known as food stamps), which is a program that gives money to families to buy food each month. The benefits come onto an EBT card every month and can be used at most food stores. If you received P-EBT you might qualify for SNAP.

SNAP eligibility is determined by how much money you make. For example, a family of four may be eligible for SNAP if they make less than $2,839 per month.

Right now, SNAP offices are still closed for walk-in visits due to COVID-19. You can complete the SNAP application online here, by paper mail, or by making an appointment at your local SNAP office to fill out an application with a Department of Human Services (DHS) caseworker. Because of COVID-19, the online application is the easiest to complete right now.

Email the Tennessee Justice Center at nutrition@tnjustice.org or visit our Get SNAP by page visiting tnjustice.org/snap/ for more information.
